How did the Fund perform during the reporting period?

The Hundredfold Select Alternative Fund Service Class Share (SFHYX) earned 11.56% for the twelve months ending August 31, 2024. The Bloomberg U.S. Aggregate Bond Index earned 7.30 %, and the Standard & Poor’s 500 Total Return Index earned 27.14% for the same period. The Fund is actively managed to anticipate and respond to trends in different types of fixed income as well as opportunities in both equity securities and commodities.

The Federal Reserve Bank had set the Fed Funds rate in July 2023, at 5.25%-5.50%, a 22-year high. The Fund reduced its exposure in multiple fixed income categories, primarily high yield, but also floating rate instruments. Third quarter economic growth as measured by GDP exceeded expectations. Treasury bond prices touched new lows for the rate cycle and most interest-sensitive sectors followed. The Fund remained in a defensive stance. In November, interest rates declined and Treasuries rose as investors expressed conviction that the Fed was in the latter stage of its rate hiking cycle. Both economically sensitive and interest rate sensitive bond categories rose. The Fund added exposure to both categories as well as to equities. Treasury yields rose modestly in January and February as the Fed signaled that a reduction in interest rates should not be expected until later in the year. The Fund tactically adjusted both its bond and equities portfolio. Since the beginning of the period, the Fund had held light and opportunistic commodity exposure; in March and April, it engaged in tactical oil and gold trades and eliminated its equity positions. Treasury yields followed a slowly declining trend from their peak in April through August. The Fund increased its exposure primarily in the municipal and preferred sectors, while reducing its high yield investments modestly and cutting its floating rate positions in half. Tactical commodity trades focused on precious metals and currencies and tactical equity trades leaned toward large caps.
