How did the Fund perform during the reporting period?

The Hundredfold Select Alternative Fund Service Class returned 2.39% from September 1, 2024 - February 28, 2025. The Bloomberg US Aggregate Bond Index returned 0.93%, while the Standard & Poor’s 500 Total Return Index returned 6.11% for the same period.

The Federal Reserve rate cut cycle began in September 2024 with a 50 basis point cut. Treasury yields rose modestly. Economically sensitive bonds performed well led by high yield. Treasury yields continued to rise steadily throughout October which was disruptive to the securities and currency markets. Treasuries and interest rate sensitive fixed income showed the most stress. Floating rates maintained favorable trends. The sub-advisor reduced the Fund’s exposure especially in high yield and municipal positions. After the November election, weakness in Treasury bonds and other interest sensitive bond classes implied a more inflationary environment. The sub-advisor increased the Fund’s investments to high yield bonds and added to floating rate/bank loan investments. Sentiment shifted markedly following the December Fed Policy announcement which dampened expectations of consistent, on-going rate cuts in 2025. The sub-advisor decreased exposure quickly mid-month. In addition to the rise in intermediate and longer-term interest rates, the “election boost” to equities faded. Tactical trades within the Fund decreased exposure while maintaining some investment holdings primarily in large cap equities.

Markets were very choppy in January, as the new administration revealed more details of its focus, especially on tariffs. The 10-year Treasury yield reached 52-week highs at one point, which roiled the securities markets. The sub-advisor expanded high yield exposure, which showed resilience. It also added alternative exposure to market neutral and long-short equity. Interest rates fell in February overall. Policy uncertainty, particularly surrounding tariffs had investors showing a lack of consistency in the securities and commodities markets. Spreads in the high yields rose, though the trend remained positive. The sub-advisor reduced exposure in high yield slightly as well as in bank loan/floating rate assets; it added duration, including on investment grade corporate bonds. Equity exposure was reduced, even temporarily net short before closing the period with a small net long
